WHAT'S INSIDE

Long-held payday perceptions are becoming outdated as faster disbursements solutions grow increasingly prevalent, and workers are now accustomed to on-demand wage access as more disbursement tools become available.

This push is being felt on multiple fronts. Gig economy workers have come to expect instant access to their earnings, whether they pick passengers up for rideshare services or buy and deliver groceries for customers. Smaller companies are looking to gain faster access to funding, too, and disbursement solutions are enabling small and medium-sized businesses (SMBs) to access loans and sales revenues within minutes after transactions are completed. These services provide quick access to capital and allow firms to offer instant payments to their staff.

Banks in several markets are also embracing instant payment systems as new tools emerge to enable quicker disbursements.

Around the disbursement world

One such new solution from on-demand delivery company Instacart is enabling gig workers to get paid faster for their work. The new service, Instant Cashout, allows shoppers who buy groceries on behalf of customers to immediately get paid for their shifts, eliminating the previous weekly direct deposit schedule. The feature is accessible via mobile app and funds are deposited directly onto workers' debit cards.

A new solution from online lender OnDeck is allowing SMBs to get similarly quick access to funds. The company recently announced it will fund and debit customer bank accounts using same-day ACH transfers. Qualified OnDeck customers can receive funds of up to $25,000 by 5 p.m. local time on the day loans are issued or they draw on lines of credit.

Visa is also looking to provide faster disbursements with a recently released solution that helps funds cross international borders with ease. The company partnered with global remittance firm Remitly to power global person-to-person (P2P) payments using Visa Direct. U.S.-based Remitly users can use the solution to transfer funds to eligible Visa debit cardholders overseas.

Restaurants add digital tipping to employees' payroll

Customers are more likely to pay with payment cards over cash when they go out to eat, but restaurant managers still need cash to pay out tips to their workers. That means they often have to run to banks before their employees leave at the end of the night. New smart cash management solutions are enabling businesses to quickly batch cash transactions and instantly disburse tips to employees' bank accounts, however. In this month's Feature Story (p. 6), Brian Hassan and Justin Roberts, co-founders of cash management solution provider Kickfin, discuss how these solutions improve restaurant efficiency and help workers embrace financial responsibility.

Deep Dive: Global online education goes gig

Thanks to digital technology and global connectivity, gig economy participation is open to just about anyone — including educators who want to provide lessons to students anywhere in the world. Teachers looking to make additional income have a lot to learn about how these marketplaces provide payments, though. This month's Tracker includes a Deep Dive (p. 14) outlining how online education marketplaces are teaching educators about gig economy participation.

May Tracker updates

Each month, the Tracker's provider directory highlights leading disbursements players. This edition boasts more than 175 providers, including three additions: JETCO Pay, Payso and Tapp.

EXECUTIVE INSIGHT

Restaurants are embracing disbursements when issuing tips to employees. Why is this good from a worker's perspective, and which other services could embrace digital disbursements to ease their cash handling pain points?

"The well-known saying "cash is king" has been undermined as of late. Cash no doubt still holds sway in many places and industries, but its influence is waning because of the ease and convenience of electronic payments. Indeed, some cities are even legislating that cash must be accepted by retailers and others so that unbanked consumers are not isolated from the economy.

This means that businesses in traditionally cash-heavy businesses must adopt systems and disbursement methods that create a bridge between the physical and the digital. Restaurants are a great example of this. Diners predominantly pay with cards for their meals, but waitstaff are accustomed to being paid out in cash. This forces managers to juggle cash reserves, make late night bank runs and document cash payouts.

By moving to a digital disbursement system, restaurants can ease their back-office strains and recordkeeping, remove the risk of those late-night bank visits and provide employees with choice and convenience in how they accept tips. For example, workers at restaurants using Kickfin and Ingo Money simply need to accept their payment via text or email and choose whichever bank account, credit, debit or prepaid account or even online wallet they prefer. The money arrives instantly. This can also be a boon for workers' financial health because it allows them to more easily apply tips to bills, obligations, etc. using their preferred accounts.

It's easy to see this same adoption and mentality take hold in adjacent hospitality businesses like bars, hotels and entertainment venues — and, as traditional cash businesses like music lessons, tutors and babysitters move to gig economy platforms, that shift to digital disbursements will naturally occur.

Since cash is not going the way of the dinosaur anytime soon, smart businesses will look for systems that create a successful bridge between real world and digital disbursements."

The customer, a man with a beard wearing a light green t-shirt, is sitting in a wooden chair and looking up at the waiter. He is holding a newspaper. Digitizing Servers' Daily Tips

There are some 2.6 million restaurant servers in the U.S., many of whom rely on gratuities for a significant share of their take-home wages. Employees have no issues when tips are paid in cash, but when patrons choose to pay their bills with credit or debit cards, managers must often run to ATMs at the end of the night so servers can leave with the funds they're owed.

Cash management hardware and software solutions could put an end to late-night cash runs, according to Brian Hassan and Justin Roberts, co-founders of payroll solution provider Kickfin. Merchants can use these solutions to quickly digitize their cash earnings and issue payouts to workers via direct deposit or prepaid card disbursements. The pair recently spoke with PYMNTS about how digital disbursement tools are taking cash off the menu while also helping wait-staff be more financially responsible.

The persistence of cash

Many servers are financially dependent on tips, and they expect to instantly receive them when their shifts are over. This is becoming difficult, Hassan noted, because approximately 90 percent of transactions made at full-service restaurants are made with credit or debit cards. Restaurants are left with a cash shortage as a result, which makes paying out tips challenging. Cash also presents servers with safety risks, he added, as they must often leave restaurants late at night and carry large sums on their persons until they can make deposits.

Restaurants can eliminate these cash-related hassles by embracing point-of-sale (POS) systems that can batch cash payments the same way they batch credit card transactions. These solutions can also instantly disburse payments into employees' bank accounts or onto prepaid cards, and even notify workers via text message when deposits are made.

"[Employees] are not leaving at the end of the night with cash in their pockets and do not have to go to the ATM to make a deposit," he said.

Helping waitstaff find financial responsibility

Digital disbursements are doing more than just providing waitstaff with faster access to their earnings, Roberts noted. Because the tips have been digitized and sent directly to their accounts, servers can be more practical about how their funds are spent.

"I think you're seeing behaviors change," he said. "People are becoming more conscientious about their spending habits."

Servers are less likely to spend their earnings frivolously when it is immediately deposited into their accounts, Roberts explained. The funds can be held there and saved for essential expenditures like rent, insurance or bills, helping them to stay on top of their financial obligations. This also enables servers to build up credit for financial products like loans and credit cards.

"By instantly paying them, we have real-time data and insights into what these employees are actually being paid," Roberts said. "[From there] we can help them get financial products, non-predatory products and lending products they wouldn't otherwise have access to."

Cash's double-edged sword

Today's consumers carry less physical currency, and one recent study noted that they prefer credit and debit cards at dine-in, fast food and coffee shop settings. Despite this trend, merchants do not want to alienate customers who still want to pay in cash. The March 2019 Retail Innovation Readiness Index™ noted that nearly 45 percent of surveyed merchants want to implement smart POS systems that accept cash. Various state and municipal legislatures have passed laws requiring them to accept cash, too, as it is often preferred by unbanked and underbanked consumers.

Merchants may want to move away from physical currency because of its risks and challenges, but both Hassan and Roberts said these factors are likely to keep physical currency in use for the foreseeable future.

“The reality is cash is not going away anytime soon,” Hassan said. “As it [is used less frequently], it becomes a bigger pain point that is more expensive and more difficult to manage.”

Digital payments provide merchants an opportunity to quickly issue funds to their workers, while also enabling workers to pursue more financially stable habits. Cash is still a major factor for restaurateurs, however, and merchants will need solutions that make managing it as efficient as possible so long as it's on the menu.

UNDER THE HOOD

Kickfin co-founder Brian Hassan explains how the company's payroll solution initiates instant payments to restaurant workers.

“Instant pay is real-time — 24/7/365. ... With Kickfin we can [initiate that] via API from the point of sale. ... When looking to calculate tipping, there's about 10 different tipping frameworks. So, all the data we need to calculate tips automatically comes from the point of sale.

We consume data from the point of sale based on the tipping framework, and we automatically calculate the tips [which] are paid to employees at the click of a button. They receive SMS text message notifications and can log into their bank accounts in real time [and see] that it's there. Then [the data is] pushed directly into payroll for tax reporting purposes.

So, really, from end-to-end, it's consume, calculate, pay and post. That's how we built it to be — very, very simple.”

NEWS & TRENDS

Getting gig workers paid quickly

Visa offers real-time payments to gig workers

Financial services giant Visa is helping businesses pay gig workers faster with a recently launched mobile app geared toward medium-sized and large businesses. The new app, Card Payouts, helps enterprises manage cash flow by integrating a card-based, front-end user experience with the infrastructure of treasury banks.

Treasury banks participating in the Card Payouts pilot are interested in sending contractor payouts and out-of-pocket expense reimbursements to recipients' eligible debit cards, according to the company. Transactions on the platform will be executed with Visa's real-time push payments solution. Under the pilot, which will take place in the fall, participating banks can enable their clients to download the Card Payouts app from the NetSuite SuiteApp store. Companies using the app will also be able to use Visa Direct to improve business and consumer disbursements.

Instant wages for Instacart workers

Grocery delivery company Instacart is also providing its workforce with instant wages. The company recently rolled out a new feature, Instant Cashout, that enables workers to get paid immediately and does away with its former weekly direct deposit payment schedule. Workers who have linked debit cards to their profiles can now access the payout feature via mobile app.

An earlier effort to provide its workers with a new payment solution resulted in fewer batch payments and was criticized by workers who experienced earnings disbursement delays. Instacart thus created Instant Cashout, which is currently only available in select U.S. cities in approximately 100 regions. The company plans to expand the offering to all markets by June.

Restaurants consider cashless worker payments

The restaurant industry is also looking to offer employees cashless payments, as cash presents a risk to those who often leave work late at night with large sums in their pockets. Credit cards are used to process 90 percent of restaurant sales, too, meaning there's often not enough cash to give to employees at the end of the night.

To help, Ingo Money is collaborating with cash management solution provider Kickfin on a solution that allows restaurant managers and owners to avoid making late-night bank runs to pay out their employees when they finish their shifts. Instead, the former's turnkey push payment solution enables the latter to offer instant digital payouts of tips to employees' bank accounts, online wallets or debit, prepaid or credit cards. Kickfin's solutions also reduce the number of people handling cash, thereby preventing theft and financial losses.

Improving business payments

OnDeck rolls out same-day funding for SMBs

SMBs are also getting faster access to funds thanks to a new solution from online lender OnDeck. The company recently announced that it will now fund and debit customer bank accounts using same-day ACH transfers, allowing qualified customers to receive up to $25,000 by 5 p.m. local time on the same day they are issued loans or draw on their credit. They can also be debited in the same way.

This move toward faster loan disbursements builds on a similar offering previously announced by OnDeck, which sees the company working with Ingo Money to enable direct, real-time loan distributions to borrowers' credit cards. Instant access grants customers more clarity into their cashflow management, and allows them to get the capital they need by the end of one business day. In the case of the Ingo Money service, SMBs can tap into their funds 24/7 — even on weekends and holidays.

Instant settlement: Disbursements' next big thing

Disbursements are also granting merchants instant access to their sales revenues, helping them to settle sales in real time. Payment solutions from FinTechs, such as PayPal and Square are now pushing funds to their bank accounts nearly as fast as sales are made.

In a recent interview with PYMNTS' Karen Webster, Ingo Money's CEO, Drew Edwards said that instant settlements will become "table stakes" in commerce. The firm has partnered with Company.com, Paysafe and others to make instant merchant settlement possible, even outside traditional processor relationships.

Edwards said that instant deposits will be especially valuable to SMBs that need fast access to their revenues. This is especially true for those that interact with, and are part of, the PayPal and Square ecosystems, he added. Square has more than 700,000 sellers using its Instant Deposit solution, for example, allowing SMBs to get their funds within seconds at the cost of 1 percent of the deposit amount, in addition to Square's standard card processing fees.

Remittance revolution

Visa, Remitly partner on real-time global P2P

Visa's push payment solutions are also being put to work in the world of remittances. The company recently announced that it will work with global remittance firm Remitly to power global person-to-person (P2P) payments with Visa Direct. The partnership enables Remitly's users to send funds from the U.S. to eligible Visa debit cardholders overseas, eliminating some of the commonly encountered complexities. Funds are able to be sent internationally and in real time, with Remitly using mobile technology, machine learning (ML), direct integrations with banking partners and cash pickup locations to calculate when recipients can expect them.

Buckzy Payments releases new cross-border payment platform

Canadian consumers may have access to similar technology thanks to Buckzy Payments, a FinTech that enables users to send money globally in real time. The firm, which launched last month, allows users to make international payments that arrive within five minutes without incurring additional fees.

Buckzy removes common frictions from international payment transfers by offering end users access to emerging payment services, such as digital wallets with mobile reload, a news release stated. The platform is expected to enable cross-border payments to more than 14 countries in Q2 2019.

Banking on faster payments

ECB plans TIPS challenge

The European Central Bank (ECB) is inviting firms to showcase their faster payments innovations next month to help its TARGET Instant Payment Settlement (TIPS) service expand. ECB plans to host service providers at its Frankfurt headquarters on May 6 and 7, allowing firms to demonstrate their TIPS-compatible consumer-facing solutions.

TIPS was initially launched to compete against popular digital payment services provided by Alibaba, Amazon, Apple and Google. Consumers did not see the benefit of TIPS, however, and the ECB realized it needed to do something to promote adoption. The EU Commission's vice president in charge of financial services even raised the possibility of using a "regulatory push" to promote the service, which is available to consumers and businesses in 19 eurozone states and offers near real-time payments via smartphones, PCs and in-store payment points.

Latvian bank gets access to instant payments

TIPS is seeing new adopters without the promotional industry event, though. Latvia's central bank, Latvijas Banka, recently joined the service and noted in a statement that instant payments are now available to more than 90 percent of the nation's credit institution customers. The TIPS connection will also enable individuals and businesses to make instant payments to bank customers in other EU nations. Approximately 3.3 million instant payments, valued at about €650 million ($725.6 million USD), have been issued since the service launched, the bank said.

Latvijas Banka has also taken steps to offer “new functionalities to instant payments,” according to a recent release. The new rules enable financial institutions (FIs) to sync personal identifiers, such as payment cards and email addresses, to customers’ bank accounts.

JPMorgan rolls out SCT Inst in Europe

U.S.-based bank JPMorgan recently took its own steps to push real-time payments by launching SEPA Instant Credit Transfer (SCT Inst) in Europe. JPMorgan said the move rounds out its real-time payment capabilities in the U.S. dollar, pound sterling and euro, setting it apart from its competitors.

Sungmahn Seo, the FI’s managing director and head of Europe, Middle East and Africa payments and foreign exchange for its treasury services, said SCT Inst will enable clients to make and receive payments within seconds. It allows credit transfers of up to €15,000, and will also help bank customers address immediate business needs, exercise better financial control and budgeting, obtain easier reconciliation and improve liquidity management.

Deutsche Bank enables SCT Inst

Deutsche Bank is working with financial software firm Serrala to launch an application programming interface (API) to provide real-time payments access to corporate treasurers across Europe. The API will link Deutsche Bank’s corporate customers to SCT Inst

as part of Serrala’s FS2 for SAP solution. The API integrates with customers’ SAP enterprise resource planning (ERP) platforms and aims to accelerate treasury and business workflows.

This is the first solution in the market that enables businesses to initiate real-time payments directly from their SAP ERP systems, according to Deutsche Bank and Serrala. Companies that wished to use SCT Inst to pay their employees, vendors or business partners previously had to rely on banks’ proprietary systems and could not initiate their own transactions.

EVERY, ACI Worldwide work to push Scandinavian payment transformation

Real-time payment solutions provider ACI Worldwide recently announced that information technology (IT) service and software provider EVERY will use its UP Retail Payments and UP Payments Risk Management solutions to better serve Nordic and European banks. EVERY provides IT services and solutions for FIs and merchants in the Nordic region, which is actively pursuing demonetization.

According to a news release, the UP Retail Payment solution will enhance EVERY’s card and mobile payment capabilities by bridging its current IT system with newer payment technologies. EVERY will also be able to leverage ACI Interchange, which supports incoming and outgoing clearing and settlement processes for payment card transactions from major international payment schemes like mobile phone payments, EMV and magnetic stripe payment cards.

DEEP DIVE

Lessons In Global Online Education Marketplaces

Gig economy workers face endless opportunities to earn extra money, establish primary income sources, make business contacts and raise their professional profiles among potential clients. The space isn't just for rideshare drivers, graphic designers and musicians, however. Educators are also using it to find tutoring opportunities and connect with pupils, and recent market trends suggest that opportunities for educators to earn a "side hustle" are likely to expand in the coming years.

Gig marketplaces enable educators to work with students outside their local communities, allowing them to reach students in any global region. Students in China can access English language lessons from a teacher based in the U.S., for example, while a guitar teacher in Canada can provide lessons to students in Europe.

The following Deep Dive focuses on educators in the gig economy and the disbursement solutions helping them tap into the market's full financial potential.

Gig economy education 101

Teachers and educators currently represent a smaller share of overall gig workers, according to the Q3 2018 Gig Economy Index. Of all those surveyed for the index, just 5.1 percent reported that their primary gig jobs were in education — a slight drop from the 5.9 percent who reported the same in Q2 2018.

There is reason to believe the space will expand in the coming years, however. The global online tutoring market is expected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 14 percent from 2018 to 2022, with the U.S. and Chinese regions leading investment efforts. The market itself is on track to be worth $325 billion by 2025, meaning that education-focused gig platforms will be well-positioned to expand.

These marketplaces already play a significant role when it comes to connecting educators with students. According to the same index, 48 percent of gig workers in education, training and library services found their job opportunities through platforms such as TakeLessons, which connects students with teachers for lessons in academics, languages, music and other areas. LiveMusicLessons, on the other hand, is specific to music and allows students to remotely receive instrument and vocal trainings.

Platforms like these are gaining popularity around the world, too. VIPKid, a Chinese linguistics marketplace, boasts an estimated 60,000 educators from the U.S. and Canada. The online education market is also strong in India, partly because of increased internet access and smartphone penetration. Local marketplace GuruQ serves as a popular central meeting place for students and tutors around the globe, and India's on-line education market is projected to grow at a CAGR of approximately 19 percent between 2016 and 2020, according to some reports.

Gig economy lessons for teachers

Global online education marketplaces are proving to be valuable resources that enable educators to tap into employment benefits, like flexibility, that other gig workers enjoy. They were previously boxed into typical school hours and pay before such platforms' emergence, and are now able to work the hours they desire at the rates they choose. Many marketplaces even take care of tax paperwork and allow tutors to collaborate and share teaching ideas.

Payment options tend to vary depending on the marketplace, which limits professionals' options. VIPKid and TakeLessons deposit funds electronically into educators' bank accounts according to fixed schedules, but online language marketplace Preply allows tutors to accumulate earnings into a digital wallet. Those funds can then be withdrawn using services like PayPal.

While these platforms grant flexible and convenient earning opportunities, users must be wary of cancellation costs. Some impose penalties on teachers if they cancel too close to the start of a lesson, for example, or have too many cancellations in a single month.

Payment limitations and penalty risks indicate that there is a learning curve for educators looking to make the most of the gig space. With more digital marketplaces opening — and presenting new, international opportunities — it appears educators have a lot to learn about earning in the highly connected and global economy.

Ingo Money, headquartered in Atlanta, is the instant money company. Founded in 2001 with a mission to digitize the paper check, its push payments technology enables businesses and banks to disburse instant, safe-to-spend electronic funds from any source to consumers anywhere through more than four billion debit, prepaid, credit, private label credit and mobile wallet accounts. This transformation of traditional payments helps businesses reduce cost and delays while dramatically improving the consumer experience.

The Ingo Instant Payments gateway enables companies and banks to deliver instant, safe-to-spend funds directly into customer accounts. This "push payments in a box" solution offers industry leading benefits, including network ubiquity to reach more than four billion consumer accounts as well as all required compliance and security checks, through one simple API integration. Ingo Money has funded over $10 billion in transactions since launch, and completed the first push payment transaction in the U.S.
