WHAT'S INSIDE

There's a growing demand for instant payments among consumers and businesses, and financial institutions (FIs), merchants and governments are working to provide. The Clearing House (TCH), which has used the same core payments infrastructure for 40 years, is implementing new developments to its payments technology, allowing participating banks to process funds in real time through its Real Time Payments (RTP) system. The number of institutions that can use RTP is growing by the month, boosting the availability of faster disbursement options.

Instant disbursements are being embraced in a variety of industries, including food service and music streaming. This push has caused more companies to rely on digital payouts to send funds to stakeholders and distribute tips among restaurant workers.

Around the world of disbursements

FIs are working to quickly develop systems and infrastructure that can handle faster payments as demand for real-time disbursements ramps up. Card network Mastercard has teamed up with P27 Nordic Payments Platform to create a real-time payment system for the region that supports multiple currencies and quicker cross-border transactions.

Payment company PayFi is also turning to partnerships. This collaboration with TCH will allow banks on the former's Branch99TM Real-Time

Platform to use RTP to speed up financial transactions, resulting in faster disbursements.

Western Union is utilizing a partnership with Visa to enable faster international payments via the latter's push payments platform, Visa Direct. The collaboration will enable speedy remittance services as well as innovative user experiences, and comes at a time when cross-border payments continue to increase in volume.

How Verify meets gig workers' insurance needs

Access to insurance is just one of the many barriers the 58 percent of millennials that view themselves as entrepreneurs have to face. Jay Bregman, CEO and co-founder of general liability insurance provider Verify, is hoping to change that with digitally available, mobile-enabled micropolicies for gig workers. For this month's Feature Story (p. 6), Bregman told PYMNTS why insurers need to change their approaches to policies and claims settlement as demand for instant payments — and remote work — becomes the norm.

Deep Dive: How real-time payments and digital technologies are changing the ways businesses pay out tips to workers in the service industry

A growing share of consumers are relying on online and mobile payments, behavior that is affecting the ways workers in certain industries get paid. Digital payments are increasingly being used to enable faster and more convenient payment experiences at restaurants, many of which are now looking to bring that ease to their servers' tip payouts. This month's Deep Dive (p. 13) delves into how instant payouts are providing the restaurant world with a more modern tipping experience.

July Disbursements Tracker updates

This edition of the Disbursements Tracker includes the profiles of more than 70 suppliers and providers, including three additions: Revelator, VPay and Xoom.

EXECUTIVE INSIGHT

How can restaurants and quick-service restaurants (QSRs) use real-time digital disbursement solutions to innovate their payment processes and satisfy workers in today's modern economy?

"On-demand services and new instant payment solutions are both natural byproducts of advancing technology. Consumers have become conditioned to instant, universal and customizable access to whatever they need by using web and mobile devices. They want their services matched to their needs, and they want their money on their terms.

We have already seen the intersection of these two phenomena [as] restaurants and QSRs embrace real-time digital disbursements [to pay] out tips to workers. As the ease and convenience of modern digital payments gain momentum, restaurants and QSRs are adopting real-time digital disbursement solutions to eliminate payment delays as well as the hassles associated with physical cash. These businesses know that providing workers with faster and more convenient access to their tips and wages gives them a competitive advantage as an employer by delivering an improved experience.

Workers are increasingly demanding faster and more convenient ways to get paid. A recent Ingo Money and PYMNTS survey found that 78.1 percent of workers were either very or extremely familiar with instant payments, and 82.2 percent of those surveyed considered receiving disbursements instantly as either very or extremely important.

Through push payments and instant money services, restaurants can instantly fund ready-to-spend payouts directly to a worker's preferred financial account. This powerful solution fulfills on the promise of speed while enabling choice and convenience. It can also contribute cost and time savings to restaurants' bottom lines."

TAILORING INSURANCE

To Meet Gig Workers' Needs

Access to insurance is just one of the many barriers the 58 percent of millennials that view themselves as entrepreneurs have to face. Prospective entrepreneurs have to endure expensive insurance policies, many of which have time-consuming, paper-based claims and payout processes. Waiting weeks for claims disbursements to settle can be particularly difficult for small business owners and gig economy workers that need flexible insurance policies.

The insurance industry is geared toward larger businesses, however. Gig economy professionals must pay for annual insurance policies they do not need — something that Jay Bregman, CEO and co-founder of general liability insurance company Verify, is looking to change. The company offers ad hoc workers insurance as needed, enabling them to seek out policies that provide coverage for as little as an hour. Bregman recently told PYMNTS why gig workers' insurance policies need to be more affordable, personalized and digital as the gig economy continues to grow.

The art of the micropolicy

The gig lifestyle requires workers to switch from one job to another, and to meet the changing conditions and needs of every new client. This can leave them underserved by traditional insurance providers that do not have policies that can cover every clients' individual risks.

"Forty percent of sole proprietors in America — over 10 million people — do not have any form of business insurance. ... That's the scale of how underserved the market is right now," Bregman said. "[Firms] just are not set up to sell micropolicies to tiny little companies."

Verify launched in 2016 as an aviation insurer for drone operators, but now focuses on selling its “micropolicies to tiny little companies.” The company’s mobile app allows users pick out general policies that cover liabilities for short-term assignments to projects that can last up to a year. That means a freelance wedding photographer can cover a five-hour shoot without spending unnecessary funds on an annual policy. Workers expense the cost of the policies — which start around $10 — back to their employers once jobs are completed.

Bregman added that it was important for Verifyly to be an app-based experience in a market that is rooted in paper. The firm has viewed its website as a conversion tool for its app and it continues to deliver on a mobile-first experience.

“Our customers are running their businesses from their phones, so they don’t want to go to a website. They want to go to an app that lets them ... configure their policies automatically and show them to their clients,” Bregman said.

Users’ claims are begun via email and processed through the company’s carrier partner, Markel, but Verifyly hopes it will be able to bring the claims settlement experience to mobile in the future. Bregman said the company will use advanced learning technologies like artificial intelligence (AI) to support such processes.

Insurance and the gig economy

The bulk of today’s gig workers source their jobs through online marketplaces and mobile job sites, making digital insurance policies increasingly important as more people than ever take part in the gig economy.

“The solution for the impending rush of the gig economy is in the product ... the insurance product and the technology product need to be fundamentally modified,” Bregman said.

That means Verifyly must integrate various payment types onto its platform.

“Right now [payments are] all on credit cards. We haven’t actually enabled Apple [Pay], Google [Pay] and other wallets, but we do see [a] future in them,” Bregman said. “We are looking at how we can start deploying them so we can have more payment options for our customers, particularly because the majority of our customers are on mobile anyway.”

Insurers must innovate their approaches as the gig economy moves online, and as this market continues to develop it will need to focus on the needs of its digital consumers.

NEWS & TRENDS

Disbursements and related news

Revelator creates smart contract mobile app for faster royalty payments

The music industry has traditionally been plagued with slow payments, but music rights administrator Revelator demoed a solution at this year's Marché International du Disque et de l'Édition Musicale (Midem) music conference that will provide faster royalty disbursements. The service, Artist Wallet, is a mobile copyright app that relies on smart contract technology to split and distribute royalty payments to recipients. Users are automatically notified when their songs are played and the app allows them to instantly cash out their royalties, which can be split among all stakeholders. Revelator explained that Artist Wallet can also be used for account reporting and contract management.

Kyriba launches real-time payments service for JPMorgan clients

Application programming interfaces (APIs) and cloud technology are also being used for payments innovations. Cloud treasury and financial solutions provider Kyriba recently launched a cross-border payment service that utilizes JPMorgan's API technology. The latter's corporate clients can use the service to make real-time, on-demand RTP payments that can be confirmed within seconds. Kyriba processes over 83 million bank transactions each month and is the first treasury provider to offer such an integration. The two companies hope the solution, which is currently only available to JPMorgan's corporate clients, will create more transparency for corporate cross-border payments.

VPay develops mobile-friendly solution for insurance payments

Turnkey claim payment solution provider VPay recently debuted a claim payment service that is bringing faster disbursements to the insurance industry. The web-based tool is mobile friendly and allows consumers to review claims, approve transfers and receive funds in their preferred method on any device. Claimants can receive payments by check, automated clearing house (ACH) or push payment, and the new solution is intended to expedite the claims process without sacrificing security.

Real-time reimbursements for eCommerce purchases

The global value of real-time compensation is expected to reach $34.3 billion over the next five years, which means that providing faster retail reimbursements is going to become key to customer satisfaction. Nearly 30 percent of online purchases are returned — a rate that's three times less for physical purchases. Retailers are creating new experiences to meet this need for seamless returns as consumers gain access to more technologies that boost the speed of reimbursements. This is a pressing need as 95 percent of United States consumers can now access same-day ACH transfers.

Investments and bank news

ACI Worldwide invests in Mindgate for real-time payments solution

Global payment solutions provider ACI Worldwide recently invested an undisclosed amount in Mumbai-based Mindgate Solutions to facilitate the creation of a real-time payments solution. The tool will utilize India's Unified Payments Interface (UPI) and grant the latter access to the former's payments solutions. UPI transfers are currently the second most common way to make digital payments in India, but the service is projected to account for over 50 percent of all of the country's digital transactions by 2023.

Eight of India's 10 largest banks use ACI for their payment needs, while 70 percent of all UPI transactions are routed through Mindgate customer banks. The investment will thus enable both companies to play more significant roles in the region's budding digital payments space.

Transbank adopts ACI Worldwide solution

ACI Worldwide is also establishing a presence in Chile, where Transbank, the country's largest acquirer, has adopted the former's Retail Payments solution to compete with other banks. The Chilean government recently opened the acquiring business to new players to foster competition, thereby forcing Transbank to upgrade its payments processing systems.

The solution will enable Transbank to remain compliant with the region's active card scheme mandates. Vicente Tredinick, chief information and operations officer for the bank, added that Retail Payments will also enable the FI to integrate next-generation technologies.

European Central Bank to trial SWIFT gpi payments

The European Central Bank (ECB) is trialing SWIFT global payments innovation (gpi) transfers that will work with the European Union's new open banking ecosystem, which enables faster and more transparent payments and disbursements. Banks participating in the pilot include BBVA, Deutsche Bank, Santander, Sberbank and UniCredit. Cross-border payments will be made using the TARGET Instant Payment Settlement (TIPS) system and allow for instant credits to accounts. SWIFT gpi, which launched two years ago, has seen significant growth and settles approximately 40 percent of its payments within five minutes.

Partnerships and payments

Visa and Western Union partner for cross-border payments

Western Union is enabling faster cross-border payments through a partnership with Visa. The former will use the latter's Visa Direct push payments platform to offer speedy remittance services as well as innovative user experiences. The partnership comes as cross-border payments continue to increase in volume — approximately $80 trillion is sent internationally via wire transfers or direct bank account transactions each year.

Visa previously delved into global payments with its acquisition of cross-border service Earthport. Bill Sheley, global head of push payments for Visa, stated that the purchase enabled the company to facilitate real-time cross-border payments for consumers in over 200 countries.

PayFi partners with TCH on real-time payment network

Payment company PayFi has formed a partnership with TCH to support real-time payments. The network, which will enable such transfers for the former's Branch99TM Real-Time Platform, currently reaches approximately half of all of U.S. bank accounts — a figure that is expected to grow. A PayFi representative noted that this is the first new core payments system used within the U.S. in 40 years.

The solution uses ISO 20022 messaging to send payments and data to banks, allowing for the growth of conversational commerce between FIs and their customers, and offers 24/7 clearing and interbank settlement. PayFi hopes the partnership will allow it to grow its Branch99TM network.

Avidia Bank to bring real-time payments to customers through TCH

Community bank Avidia Bank was the first institution to sign on to TCH's RTP system via PayFi's Branch99TM platform. This move will allow the FI to offer its customers real-time payments and settlement, as well as advanced messaging capabilities.

The bank will use the service to support such payments for national and local markets, said Robert Conery, chief operating officer and executive vice president for Avidia. He added that its use of RTP comes as “faster payment alternatives become ubiquitous in the digital era.”

Mastercard, P27 create real-time payment system

P27 Nordic Payments Platform, a coalition of banks co-owned by Danske Bank, Handelsbanken and Nordea Bank, among others, has partnered with card network Mastercard to develop a real-time payments system with multicurrency support. The latter will integrate new payments technology and more support for electronic payments, which are quickly growing popular among Nordic consumers and businesses.

The two companies hope to offer a single interface for banks’ foreign and domestic transactions, making payments faster and less costly. The platform is still going through regulatory approval, but its eventual goal is to develop new, unique products and services.

Starling Bank taps Tribe Payments for real-time payments scheme

United Kingdom-based Starling Bank has partnered with payments platform Tribe Payments in a deal that will create customer access to the major European payment schemes. The partnership grants the latter access to faster payments within the U.K., as well as to the former’s revised Payment Services Directive (PSD2)-compliant APIs. It will also be able to integrate with Starling’s bank accounts.

Starling will use Tribe’s payment platform to provide its customers with access to real-time payments. It will also use the latter’s fraud technologies to minimize risks and its payment technologies for card and bank-to-bank payments. Starling hopes the partnership will help it develop new products.

DEEP DIVE

How real-time payments and digital technologies are changing the ways businesses pay out tips to workers in the service industry

A growing share of U.S. consumers are using mobile phones as part of their dining experiences, from making reservations to ordering meals. Restaurants are fast embracing instant payments to deliver on the speed and convenience that consumers have come to expect. Such tools can also benefit workers by digitizing their wages and tips.

Tips and gratuities are vital to the approximately 2.5 million Americans working as restaurant servers. Many of these workers earn the bulk of their wages in cash-based tips, which is becoming a problem as consumers increasingly go digital.

Restaurants are looking to solve this problem by embracing tools that not only allow consumers to use their phones to pay their bills, but also tip their servers.

Instant tipping in restaurants and beyond

Instant tip payouts are beneficial for restaurants, servers and diners alike. Restaurants equipped with the necessary tools can disburse real-time payments to staff, eliminating delays and the need to divvy up cash at the end of a shift. California-based startup Kickfin alerts servers when they received funds with text or email notifications, for example, and wages are instantly pushed to whichever account the server chooses, including debit, credit or prepaid cards as well as online wallets.

Delivery apps like DoorDash and Postmates met this need in the U.S. by providing digital tipping options on their apps, which suggest a 15 percent gratuity for orders. Ridesharing apps like Uber and Lyft have similar offerings. Tipping methods such as these are becoming more important to customers who are often unable to tip at restaurants when paying with cards or mobile.

Some restaurants in the U.K. are looking to provide better tipping experiences with apps like Gratuu. The mobile tipping solution launched in 2014 and enables users to tip individual servers or deposit funds into a virtual tip jar by scanning a QR code or typing in a unique digital identification number. Gratuu currently charges a 3.5 percent fixed rate for every transaction and has seen use outside of restaurants at businesses such as hair salons, where consumers can often pay for haircuts digitally, but must remember to carry cash to tip their stylists.

Many startups have noticed the demand for such services, as restaurants and salons are just two types of businesses out of many where workers rely on tips.

One such platform is mobile tipping app BRAVO, which allows users to search for and tip service workers from a variety of industries. Transactions can be made without either party having to exchange personal information. One downfall of the app is that it takes a 2 percent fee for all transactions and tips made on its platform.

These apps, as well as more ubiquitous services like Venmo, are aiming to change how consumers approach paying and tipping. They provide services that cater to today's digital consumers while also making it easy for service workers to receive payouts for their work.

Tipping and the future of payments

Consumers worldwide are using digital payments so frequently that withdrawing cash can almost be considered a chore. Workers that rely on tips are going to start expecting to receive their funds in the same ways that consumers pay. Restaurants and other businesses in the service industry that want to remain competitive are going to need to follow consumer demand and innovate their payment experiences.
