WHAT'S INSIDE

Significant strides have occurred in recent years toward more streamlined and automated digital lending processes and disbursements. Yet, the pandemic revealed weak points across the industry. Siloed operations and digital fragmentation have contributed to growing costs of servicing loans, which increased 173% on average. Funding needs coupled with low-interest rates drove an ongoing increase in small business and commercial real estate loans. Mortgages and refinanced loans also have experienced growth in response to those lower rates.

One New Zealand bank responded with a workflow redesign that used cloud-based computing to help bring disparate workgroups onto the same page for its loan maintenance request process. New hire time-to-productivity increased 25%, and customer retention grew 30%. Such examples demonstrate the importance of having more than a digital storefront with paperless applications and account management and using technology to improve workflows rather than just replace them.

Some firms have been gathering data for years, enabling them to develop a comprehensive understanding of their processes and their customer base. This work has been beneficial particularly for firms servicing personal loans, as they can use their own data regarding customer repayment habits in evaluating risk. PYMNTS' research shows that 24% of surveyed consumers have used personal loans, and personal loans are the fourth most in-demand form for consumer credit, after credit cards, auto loans and mortgages. Marrying automation with data and improving workflows can enable personalized approaches that create a better customer experience while also lowering lenders' risk and mitigating costs.

Disbursements developments around the world

Ad-hoc payments account for 38% of sales for small and mid-sized businesses (SMBs), and buyers still issue paper checks for most of those payments. Delays in issuing, receiving and processing these payments lead to 30% being received as much as a month past due. Automated payments systems offer a solution, but the transition has been slow, as buyers lack the motivation to move away from conventional approaches. Decoupling buyers and suppliers through digital disbursement solutions can incentivize buyers by saving them money, by eliminating inefficiencies and enabling suppliers to offer discounts for early payment.

Some lenders that have moved toward digital approval processes were caught off guard by the influx of demand driven by the pandemic. The added pressure on systems implemented to improve efficiency has exposed areas that need improvement. Borrowers respond best to an optimized, multichannel approach involving live, personal assistance coupled with digital self-service. Additionally, lenders can use digital tools to create personalized customer solutions, matching their needs and desires. Not only does the optimized, multichannel approach produce greater customer satisfaction, it also yields the most efficient results, cutting the average time from application to approval in half compared to non-optimized approaches.

With the pandemic well into its second year and government assistance programs completed or winding down, small businesses still need more capital. Even those businesses awaiting disbursements through federal loan programs may require bridge loans to keep their doors open until those funds arrive. Both institutional and online lenders have increased their loan approvals to SMBs in recent months, but just by fractions of a percent.

For more on these stories and other disbursements developments, check out the Tracker's News and Trends section (p. 12).

Digital lending may help disburse loans in days, but technology doesn't solve everything

LendingClub has automated most loan approvals and is disbursing funds to borrowers faster than ever before as society and the economy begin to emerge from the pandemic. Automated data analysis combined with personalized service has sped up loan approvals for known borrowers. The digital transition presents new challenges in ensuring automation does not introduce a disparate impact to disadvantaged populations. For this month's Feature Story (p. 8), PYMNTS spoke with Anuj Nayar, financial health officer at LendingClub, about how the peer-to-peer lending company uses internal analytics to help speed loan approvals and mitigate risk.

Deep Dive: Accelerating loan disbursements with a digital approach

Optimization requires using new digital tools to improve rather than replace personalized touches and live support.

Automation can improve speed and mitigate risk by removing the potential for human error. At the same time, relying too heavily on technology can slow down loan approvals and discourage borrowers from interacting with a lender again in the future. This month's Deep Dive (p. 17) explores the evolving digital lending space and how lenders can better serve the needs of borrowers and their own bottom lines by eliminating physical paperwork and streamlining loan approval and management practices with technology.

EXECUTIVE INSIGHT

How can lenders ensure the security of faster loan disbursements?

Most borrowers likely don't think about the security of their instant loan disbursement — they just assume the funds will arrive, until they do not. So, the onus is on the lender to ensure the security of their payout and that the customer never has a reason to question it.

The biggest risk of an instant payment is also — unfortunately — its primary benefit: its speed. Once the funds are pushed, they are instantly available to any recipient who has received them. That's a fantastic user experience when funds flow to the right person, but an enormous problem if they end up in the hands of a fraudster because the payment is irrevocable and cannot be clawed back.

While this may seem intimidating, it doesn't have to be. Putting the right technology and risk and compliance controls in place provides the speed necessary for a positive customer experience as well as the authentication required for an accurate transaction.

For example, in-line digital identity verification and account ownership validation ensure the lender both pays who they intend and funds an account owned by that same recipient. Further, sanctions screening and clearing and account-level velocity monitoring provide compliance with regulations. Finally, transactions need to be processed on bank-hardened platforms certified annually for PCI DSS Level 1 and SSAE SOC 1, Type 2 and SOC 2, Type 2 compliance.

With these protections in place, lenders can deliver a superior disbursements experience for customers and rest easy having a high level of confidence in the safety and security of their faster loan payouts.

LendingClub On The Benefits And Potential Pitfalls Of Automated Lending

Personal loans still were a niche product when peer-to-peer lending company LendingClub was founded in 2007. Today, PYMNTS' research shows that 24% of United States consumers have used personal loans, with the popularity of these loans growing even more during the pandemic.

As consumers faced the financial crunch of the pandemic, they also increasingly sought debt repayment relief through hardship plans, under which borrowers could make interest-only payments or skip payments altogether. These plans placed added pressure on systems that were not designed for a sudden influx of such requests, according to Anuj Nayar, financial health officer at LendingClub. Rather than having borrowers spend hours on the phone, LendingClub developed a digital solution.

"First thing was just ensuring that we could make it very easy for people to apply for a range of plans as their financial circumstances change, to ensure that they got what they needed with an easy online service," he said. "We were one of the first to implement the idea that you could apply for a hardship plan online."

Nayar said approximately 12% of their loan base applied for hardship plans at the height of the pandemic. That number is now down to approximately 1%. At the same time, rather than consolidating credit card debt — the service LendingClub is most known for — many applicants are seeking personal loans for personal and professional expenses, such as creating home offices. This dynamic lending landscape requires data-driven solutions that can quickly adapt to new shifts.

Speeding the loan approval process

Even before the pandemic, online and mobile options changed how people conducted business. The events of 2020 sped up that transition, and the financial industry was slow to catch up.

"Retail is now mainly online, especially during the pandemic," Nayar said. "Booking a taxi is an online service. All these things have changed, but banking has not been fundamentally rebuilt from the ground up until now."

With a Net Promoter Score (NPS) of 78, LendingClub attributes its customer satisfaction to helping customers eliminate credit card debt, as well as to having nearly half of its employees in customer support roles. A recent survey showed that live, personal service combined with digital self-service speeds up the loan approval process, for example.

Nayar said approximately half of the company's customers return to LendingClub for additional loans. Customer satisfaction brings borrowers back, but so does a faster approval process. Because of its digital lending approach, LendingClub can use data already collected on existing customers to approve returning applicants more quickly.

"The buzzwords are [artificial intelligence (AI) and machine learning (ML)] and all that stuff, but we are doing a billion dollars of loans a month," he said. "You couldn't do that amount if you weren't using the latest technology. We have what we think is one of the largest data sets of any of our peer sets. We have something like 150 billion cells of data on our customer base built up."

The data offers insights into consumer credit behavior through varying credit environments. Coupled with constant testing and evaluating everything from marketing to servicing loans and even managing fraud, this data helps LendingClub meet customer needs while mitigating risk.

According to Nayar, the three main things borrowers want to know are: will they get the money, when will they get the money and how much will the loan cost them? Whether applying for an auto loan or a personal loan, quickly receiving the money is important to borrowers across the board. Products such as balance transfer, in which money is electronically disbursed directly to a creditor, help make the process move more quickly and approvals easier by mitigating the risk of sending money directly to a borrower.

With an unknown risk environment at the start of the pandemic, LendingClub focused on its known customer base, cutting back loan origination by approximately 90%. That slowdown gave the company time to dig into systems and data. Now back to pre-pandemic lending levels, LendingClub has automated approximately 80% of its loans. Approvals for those loans can happen in hours, with disbursements made to borrowers within a day or two.

Mitigating disparate impact from automated approvals

Automation has brought speed and convenience, but it also has introduced potential pitfalls. In the past, minorities or other disadvantaged groups may have faced prejudicial decisions from loan officers. Now, lenders face the challenge of ensuring their algorithms do not inadvertently discriminate.

“How do you manage speed and simplicity against ensuring that you are not, unfortunately, not through intent, but actions, creating something that is for some reason unfairly inhibiting a particular protected class?” Nayar said. “You can do stuff fast, but are you also making sure you’re doing it fair?”

It is possible, as technology advances, that a FinTech may not be able to articulate why its automated process gave different rates to different borrowers, Nayar said. If a human made the decision, there would be recourse for apparent prejudice, but a lender may not know where to start to ensure an automated process is not discriminating.

“That’s not OK. We need to be able to make sure that we are not — even unintentionally — driving some of this stuff,” he said.

LendingClub recently joined the National Community Reinvestment Coalition (NCRC) and other FinTech firms in asking the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) to weigh in on lenders’ obligations to ensure against disparate impacts.

“I do think it’s an important point, as you’re thinking about speed and simplicity, to also consider fairness,” Nayar said.

NEWS & TRENDS

EXAMINING THE CHANGING LENDING LANDSCAPE

Bridge loans may help SMBs in need as they wait for long-term assistance

The Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) may have ended in May 2021, but the need for financial assistance from SMBs has not. The recipients of 70% of PPP loans already have applied for loan forgiveness, including 92% who received PPP loans in 2020. The Small Business Administration's (SBA) COVID-19 Economic Injury Disaster Loan Relief (EIDL) continues to accept applications through the end of the year, and the program recently expanded the maximum loan cap and list of eligible businesses.

EIDL funding is far from immediate, however, and businesses may have to wait three to four months after approval before they see any funding. Approvals for loans to SMBs have increased at both small and large banks, but just by a fraction of a percentage point each month. Some businesses that cannot afford to wait may find the answer in the form of bridge loans. The short-term financing option could give SMBs the breathing room they need to survive until long-term assistance reaches them.

Improving loan management with a technological facelift

Siloed operations and digital fragmentation left lenders vulnerable to significant changes and challenges created by the pandemic, with much of the process of both loan approvals and loan management still conducted through inefficient, manual processes. Many consumers sought mortgage and refinance loans due to lower interest rates in 2020, while 2021 has brought a continued increase in small business and commercial real estate loans. Yet, even as more consumers sought loans, the loan forbearance rate grew from 0.25% to 2.66% in 2020. Compounding factors raised the average cost of servicing a loan by 173%, while non-performing loans became 400% more costly to service.

Global financial institutions (FIs) could address fragmentation in the changing lending landscape by investing in automated cloud-based solutions. Doing so can lead to greater cohesion across legacy systems, introducing efficiencies and improving the speed with which lenders can respond to changing market conditions. Properly applied technology also can improve customer experiences, including making it easier for borrowers to manage their end of transactions.

China's central bank guidance thaws residential loan disbursements

Buyers and developers in China are facing a mixed situation with home loans, though recent developments indicate the availability of funds could be on the rise. Lenders were cautious about issuing home loans due to their perception of regulatory efforts by the country's central bank, the People's Bank of China (PBOC). Banks were concerned they could be accused of creating debt bubbles after the PBOC capped property loans in January. In September, the PBOC said some banks had misunderstood its debt-control policies, and disbursements since have increased.

Developers have shown stresses on their cash flows, meanwhile, with unfinished projects leading to increased hesitation from buyers to make new purchases. State-backed media reported that property loans in October grew by 150 to 200 billion yuan ($23.5 to $31.3 billion USD) from September, and analysts are encouraged by accelerated issuance of residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS). The nation's total outstanding mortgage loans reached 31.37 trillion yuan ($5.84 trillion USD) at the end of September.

SPEEDING LOAN APPROVALS AND OPTIMIZING CUSTOMER EXPERIENCES

Most Australian FIs are working to provide instant loan approvals by 2023

More than half of Australian FIs said they plan to implement instant approval processes for loans in the next two years, according to a recent report. In terms of instant applications and approvals of services, 54% said they were planning to achieve implementation in the same time frame. The report showed a general trend toward offering more digital services, including facial verification at login (50%), open banking (54%) and crypto deposits, payments and transactions (68%). These FIs are emphasizing fast turnarounds for loan approvals to help ensure positive experiences for new customers.

The efforts by FIs appear to be in response to the recent increase in consumers conducting more business online because of the pandemic. In the previous year, 67% of Australians created at least six new online accounts, and 75% used either online or mobile portals to onboard to a new service, for example. Though consumers may have turned to remote options for creating new accounts during the pandemic, the report indicated that users have continued to use those services remotely.

Mortgage firm customer satisfaction tied to customized experiences

Efforts by some mortgage firms to streamline the mortgage application process have created problems in customer satisfaction. On a 1,000-point scale, mortgage originators saw overall scores drop 5 points due to declining customer satisfaction, primarily regarding higher refinancing volumes. The problems stem from firms attempting to employ a one-size-fits-all digital workflow.

Jim Houston, managing director of consumer lending and automotive finance intelligence at J.D. Power, said a surge in applications has revealed weaknesses in originators' methods for making applications more efficient. Digitized self-help tools and electronic applications have streamlined the process, but mortgage applicants still want highly customized experiences. Live, personal service combined with digital offerings have helped build retention and customer satisfaction, especially among younger consumer groups. This approach also yielded the lowest perceived timeline from application to approval: 12.7 days on average.

DISBURSEMENT DILEMMAS

Replacing paper checks with instant payments benefits buyers and suppliers

According to recent PYMNTS' research, SMBs receive 38% of their sales through ad-hoc payments. These infrequent, one-time transactions experience significant delays, with 30% of these payments made late and often more than a month past due. SMBs traditionally have received payments via paper checks sent through the mail, due to convention and a lack of payment choice.

Drew Edwards, CEO of Ingo Money, told PYMNTS that the tide is slowly shifting toward replacing paper checks with automated payment systems for ad-hoc payments. For the buyers, this can mean greater efficiency and, ultimately, savings. These savings come not just through a less-involved payment process but also through the potential for suppliers to offer discounts in return for instant payments. Larger buyers also can benefit from the scalability and handling of payments to multiple small suppliers through a single system. A "network of networks" approach can decouple buyers and suppliers, permitting each to pay and be paid in the manner that best suits them.

Human error, outdated IT systems underpay UK pensioners £1 billion

Repeated human errors recently caused the United Kingdom's Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) to underpay 134,000 pensioners by an average of £8,900 ($11,961 USD). The National Audit Office (NAO) has attributed the approximate £1 billion ($1.34 billion USD) in errors to a combination of outdated IT systems and complex rules. A report by the NAO found that many of those affected by this error were women, specifically widows, married women and those over the age of 80, who were underpaid by as much as £100,000 ($134,410 USD).

The DWP increases State Pensions for individuals when they turn 80, and many of the underpayments relate to individuals who were entitled to payments after the death of a spouse but did not receive them. The DWP does not have an estimate of how long it will take to identify and contact those affected by the underpayment. This error has brought forth demand for reforms in the system. The DWP stated that it has implemented new training and quality control standards but gave no statement on updating its IT systems.

Australian employees struggle with pandemic payroll problems

A recent survey of Australian workers shows concern over payroll errors during the pandemic, with 52% of workers believing they were underpaid by employers at least once. The number of workers who believe employers paid them late also rose from 48% before the pandemic to 51% during the pandemic. Underpayment wasn't the only payroll problem, with 43% of workers experiencing difficulties such as failed payments or incorrect tax withholdings in their paychecks, and 38% reported overpayments. Resolution for these issues has been slow: 43% of workers had to wait at least two pay cycles to have the problem addressed, and 12% say their pay dispute still is unresolved. Late payments are a more significant problem in the Asia-Pacific region, where 76% of workers have experienced a late payment, well above the global average of 69%.

Various legislative changes during the pandemic created some challenges with payroll in Australia, and some businesses struggled to keep up. Additionally, the influx of errors can add to the workload for payroll employees, as they shift focus to correcting these errors rather than preventing them. Automation and improved use of integrated digital technologies may help these businesses eliminate mistakes created by human error.

DEEP DIVE

How Digitizing The Lending Process Can Help Accelerate Secure Fund Disbursements

Technological improvements across the financial sector have revolutionized the industry, and recent events surrounding the pandemic have only accelerated advancements. In response to the changing expectations of an increasingly digital-savvy customer base and the need to improve efficiencies and experiences, the financial sector increasingly is looking to digital solutions. Web and mobile technologies already have transformed how FIs engage with customers, and the creation of digital experiences makes the borrowing process faster and more convenient.

Unlike the digital-first experience offered in managing other financial products, most loan approvals still require manual paperwork. Filling out, copying and sending physical forms adds to labor costs and time delays in the process. A digital approval process would eliminate the added work and the built-in delay of physical forms, plus the risk of an added delay if delivery of physical paperwork is interrupted or lost. Digital applications also provide a higher level of accuracy and reduce the risk of human error.

Compared to a manual approach, digital lending makes it easier for both traditional and FinTech lenders to analyze processes and evaluate best practices. The digital process can automate data gathering, which lends itself to faster analysis of trends, areas for improvement and potential solutions. Having that integrated data also can eliminate delays in processing applications and decision-making. This month's Deep Dive examines how speed and security are crucial when funding loans and how FIs can help accelerate loan processing and disbursements.

The move to digital lending

The pandemic disrupted the entire economy, not least of all the lending industry, in which digital lending from acquisition to loan management gained traction throughout 2020. The move to digital has enabled FinTech lenders to use automation to improve speed and accuracy in their underwriting decisions. These lenders apply advanced algorithms and analytical tools to traditional and alternative data sources, enabling them to make fast, accurate and secure lending decisions. The digital trend also impacts the loan management process, with disbursements and repayments handled electronically through various channels, including bank accounts, eCommerce accounts and mobile wallets. This move not only increases the speed with which funds are disbursed and collected but also provides more opportunities for applicants to receive and repay loans in a manner that best suits their needs. A PYMNTS' survey found that more than 63% of microbusinesses and more than 71% of consumers would be more loyal to a lender that offers free instant payments.

Digital lending also provides more accessible data to lenders regarding individual borrowers and the overall processes, enabling more efficient collection and recovery strategies. That same data also can improve the customer experience, helping lenders customize the user experience at every step of the lending process, from communication to account management.

Optimizing digital channels without losing customers

Respondents in a recent report said they experienced a faster approval process of 12.7 days on average when digital self-services complemented live, personal service. Too many channels can slow the process, though, and adding traditional communication methods such as mail and email brought the average timeline to 21.5 days. Lenders also need to optimize channels through customizable approaches. The one-size-fits-all approach common at the start of the pandemic, while streamlined and efficient from the perspective of loan originators, led to problems in customer satisfaction.

At the start of the PPP, SMBs expected FinTechs to help navigate the process more quickly, but a survey of PPP loan recipients found that just 18% of those who borrowed through FinTechs were satisfied with their experience, 40% were neutral and 42% were dissatisfied.

Gauging borrower interest

There still is plenty of borrower interest, however. After weathering 2020, 56% of SMBs expressed interest in working with online lenders in the coming year. Another survey showed that competitive rates and favorable terms would motivate 23% of respondents to consider a FinTech lender. Another 19% of respondents believed securing an online loan would be easier than working with a traditional lender, and 8% said online lending would be more convenient. The growing preference for handling financial matters online motivated 9% of respondents to favor FinTech lenders, though personal reasons ranged from pandemic concerns to paperless preferences. Of the 12% who already had secured loans from digital lenders, most had secured personal loans to cover expenses such as food and household goods. PYMNTS' research shows that personal loans are now the second most popular type of unsecured loan after credit cards, with 24% of respondents using personal loans.

Both SMBs and individuals continue to show growing interest in securing loans, and digital solutions will play an essential role in acquiring and servicing those loans efficiently. Still, lenders of all types and sizes will need to evaluate their processes, ensuring they are improving and not staying stagnant. These improvements include making use of automated data gathering and data analysis to evaluate best practices and optimization, as well as applying solutions to refine workflows and balance live, personal service with self-service options.
